

Child Health Now is World Vision's first global campaign focused on a single issue: reducing the preventable deaths of children under five. Campaign is World Vision's five-year commitment to reducing these deaths.

Through this campaign, World Vision International wants to support communities in raising their voices about their right to quality health care, and press national governments to meet their responsibilities to children, mothers, families and communities throughout their country. World Vision International joins hands with local government and NGO partners to cooperatively address the critical health-related issues in specific communities.

Working locally is not enough, however. World Vision also wants to urge wealthy nations to fulfil their promises to improve conditions in the developing world. More than 190 world leaders have committed to achieve the UN's Millennium Development Goals by 2015. World Vision's Child Health Now campaign calls on the international community to rededicate itself to these goals.

Join the campaign and sign the petition that urges your elected leaders to put child health at the top of their agendas.